Makerspaces are essentially designated spaces where people come together to make things.
What’s the difference between a shed and a makerspace?

One of them is called a makerspace.
OK, but why does that matter to us?
Two of the key trends in the Library Edition of the 2017 NMC Horizon Report¹ relate directly to makerspaces:

Patrons as Creators
Rethinking Library Spaces
Sure, but how is this going to help the students?
Makerspaces facilitate a number of different pedagogical approaches:\n\n- Active Learning
- Collaborative Learning
- Inquiry-Based Learning
- Project-Based Learning
- Constructionism
Makerspaces are being used by different academic institutions in a number of ways.

“I think this was probably the best thing I’ve done in terms of non-subject stuff in the library. I would actually really love it if something like this could be made into a regular sort of thing. I’ve always been interested in learning about arduinos, but never had the opportunity to just play with one to see it in action. I think lots of other students and staff could benefit from attending something like this!”
“The workshop was really, REALLY fun, I loved it (it kind of helped me be more confident); please do more of these. Library is a great space for workshops like these; I find that most university buildings belong to different schools/departments, whereas the library is for everyone.”
